Welcome

There could hardly be a more timely or more urgent issue than the one chosen as the central topic for this annual convention of the German Association for American Studies. In face of the current global crisis, which is seen by many as the worst recession since the Great Depression of the 1930s, questions of economy continue to dominate public and political discourses to an unprecedented degree.

Even though a more severe economic breakdown could apparently be averted by the various counter-reactions introduced by governments both in the U.S. and abroad, it is still difficult to assess the overall damaging effects and, even more, to predict the mid- and long-term effects of the disaster on both global markets and national budgets.

Especially in the U.S., the economic meltdown marks more than the fatal culmination of individual greed, reckless underpricing of risks, and the failure of supervisory control. It also severely shattered the belief in the self-regulatory forces of the free market that for many has stood as the most essential element of an American economy. What John Cassidy has called the 'utopian economics' of the last forty years rested on the 'notion of financial markets as rational and self-correcting mechanisms' – a notion that has been attacked, among others, by George Akerlof and Robert Shiller who insist that economic behavior for the most part is deeply influenced by 'irrational' impulses. Consequently, much of the political initiatives emerging in the wake of the crisis have focused on the introduction of stronger regulatory and supervisory mechanisms to keep the unpredictable dynamics of the open market at bay.

These debates are of course not unprecedented; in fact, they appear to be a constant element throughout much of the economic, social and cultural history of the United States. Indeed, it could be argued, that the complexity – and thus also probably the unpredictability – of economical trends, developments and cycles per se is due to the fact that these developments are never purely economic, but always social, political, and cultural as well.

Thus the annual conference will be concerned with 'American Economies' in the plural rather than the singular: not only as an attempt to acknowledge the diversity of the American economy in itself, both in its practices and its theories and models, but also as an effort to investigate and analyze the various and complex interdependence of economic, political, social and cultural aspects and forces. The workshops and keynotes offered over the course of the convention are thus meant to present a multidimensional approach to American economies, their historical development and formation, as well as their contemporary significance and global influence.

Keynote Speakers

James K. Galbraith is currently Lloyd M. Bentsen Chair in Government and Business Relations and Professor of Economics at the LBJ School of Public Affairs at the University of Texas at Austin. After attaining degrees in Economics at Harvard, King's College, Cambridge, and Yale, he served in several positions on the staff of the U.S. Congress. Additionally, he held a Fulbright Distinguished Visiting Lectureship in China in the summer of 2001, was named a Carnegie Scholar in 2003, and writes for various political and cultural publications. His recent research has focused on the measurement and understanding of inequality in the world economy. Galbraith's most recent book The Predator State: How Conservatives Abandoned the Free Market and Why Liberals Should Too was published in 2008.

Patricia J. Williams is Professor of Law at Columbia University and holds a BA from Wellesley College and a JD from Harvard Law School. Williams is a member of the State Bar of California and the Federal Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit and has served as an advisor on several legal and political councils. She was a fellow in the School of Criticism and Theory at Dartmouth College and has been an Associate Professor at the University of Wisconsin School of Law and its department of Women's Studies. Williams also worked as a consumer advocate in the office of the City Attorney in Los Angeles. In 1993, Harvard University Press published Williams's The Alchemy of Race & Rights to widespread critical acclaim, and in 2004 she published her most recent book Open House: Of Family, Food, Friends, Piano Lessons and the Search for a Room of My Own.

Julie A. Nelson is a member of the Economics Faculty at the University of Massachusetts, Boston, USA. She is the author of Economics for Humans (2006), Feminism, Objectivity, and Economics (1996), and several other books and articles. She received her Ph.D. in Economics from the University of Wisconsin, Madison, was a founding board member of the International Association for Feminist Economics, and is an Associate Editor of the journal Feminist Economics.

American Economies

Eva Boesenberg is Professor of North American Literature and Culture at Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin. She studied German, English, and Indology at the University of Freiburg and at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, after which she served as Assistant Professor of American Studies at Martin-Luther-Universität Halle. She has edited a volume on Chancen und Grenzen des Dialogs zwischen den Geschlechtern and has published articles on U.S.-American literature and culture from the 18th to the 20th centuries, the construction of whiteness, masculinities, and basketball. Her latest book Money and Gender in the American Novel, 1850-2000 was published by Universitätsverlag Winter in April 2010.

Mary Pattillo is Professor of Sociology and African American Studies at the Faculty Affiliate Institute for Policy Research at Northwestern University. She received her PhD in Sociology at the University of Chicago. Pattillo's areas of interest include qualitative methods, race and ethnicity (specifically the black middle class), and urban sociology. In books such as Black Picket Fences (1999) and Black on the Block: The Politics of Race and Class in the City (2007) and many published articles she investigates economic, spatial, and cultural processes in black Chicago neighborhoods. Pattillo is a founding board member and active participant in Urban Prep Charter Academy, the first all-boys public charter high school in Chicago.

Richard Price has written eight novels, including Clockers, Freedomland and Samaritan. His latest novel Lush Life appeared last year with Picador. He also wrote the screenplays for the movies The Sea of Love, Mad Dog and Glory, and The Color of Money, for which he received an Oscar nomination. For his work on the HBO series The Wire he won the 2007 Edgar Award for television writing. He is a chronicler of urban life, especially in New York. He was born in 1949 and brought up in the Parkside projects in the Bronx. He graduated from Cornell, and did graduate work in creative writing at both Columbia and Stanford.
